

“Deutscher Krebspreis” – German Cancer Award 2020 for Excellent Clinical Research

The German Cancer Award 2020 for Excellent Clinical Research was awarded on 20 February 2020 to Prof. Dr. Dr. h.c. Andreas du Bois.

The German Cancer Award, sponsored by Deutschen Krebsgesellschaft [German Cancer Society] and Deutsche Krebsstiftung [German Cancer Foundation], is one of the highest awards in German cancer medicine. It is awarded once a year for outstanding achievements in experimental, translational and clinical research. In the "Clinical Research" category, the 2020 award went to Prof. Dr. Dr. h.c. Andreas du Bois.

Andreas du Bois is a leading expert in gynecological oncology. As a young senior physician, he founded the AGO Study Group and thus laid the foundation for the establishment of innovations in gynecological oncology and improvements in therapy standards for ovarian cancer.

The AGO Study Group represents German gynecological oncology internationally like no other group before it and is a respected partner in the international network of gynecological oncology groups. It has helped to develop and define the global standard of ovarian cancer therapy and, together with its international partners, is the leading study group with regard to the evaluation of new therapeutic strategies and methods.
